Every leader's abilities are put to the test at some point in their career. How well they handle the ups and downs, the excitement and turmoil, proves whether they're truly a great leader, or just another wannabe.

For its most recent Influencers editorial package, titled "How I Lead," LinkedIn asked some of the world's most successful executives, entrepreneurs, and industry experts to share their best leadership secrets and "surefire management methods" for getting through the good times, and bad.

1. Richard Branson: Decisiveness is key.

The Virgin Group founder writes: "One of the most important skills any leader can learn is when to be decisive, and when to take a step back and look at the wider picture before making the big calls." In times of turmoil, growth, or crisis, he says, there will be more decisions to be made and less time to make them. "There will also be an almost irresistible temptation to make these decisions as quickly as possible. A leader must be calm, confident in his choices, visible to his team and their customers, and in control of the situation."

Branson says a good leader never rushes in and jumps to rash conclusions before knowing all the facts — they delay judgment and first try to see the whole picture clearly. Then, he writes, they contemplate quietly.

"After looking at all the stats, speaking to all the experts and analysing all of the angles, then take some time to yourself to think things through clearly. Take a walk, find a shady spot, or simply sit and think for a while. Don't delay unnecessarily — but don't rush either. Get that balance right, and you are far more likely to make the right call."

General Motors CEO Mary Barra. Barra may be CEO of General Motors, but she's acutely aware that some of the best ideas don't come from the corner office. "No matter your industry, ideas can come from anywhere — from the line, the retail floor, or at your engineering center," she writes.

Because people have different roles within the company, they have different perspectives, Barra explains — and those alternate viewpoints can be invaluable. By getting the entire team's input, she's able to ensure that "solutions are evaluated from every angle."

3. Max Levchin: Your number one job is to get the best out of your team.

PayPal cofounder and CEO of Affirm, Inc. Max Levchin. Levchin, cofounder of PayPal and current CEO of Affirm, Inc., says in the early days of PayPal, he "avoided managing a team for as long as possible." He was a coder; he wanted to code. In the years since then, though, he's learned a number of lessons about management.

Principle among them: Above all else, your job is getting people to do their absolute best. "A great leader knows how to identify and navigate around the team members' weaknesses and capitalize on their strengths," he explains. And part of nurturing a stellar team means standing by them "through the best and worst of times." The best leaders, Levchin says, push their teams, cheer on their teams, and look out for their teams — in times of upheaval and in times of growth.

4. Sallie Krawcheck: You need to gain your team's confidence.

Sallie Krawcheck. The Ellevate Network chair and former top Wall Street exec has led businesses in turmoil.

Just after she was named Director of Research at Bernstein, Krawcheck's mentor — a top analyst at the firm — quit.

"Bernstein wasn't a big firm to start with, so any loss was felt," she writes. "But this one really stung. And, insult to injury, this was during the pre-Spitzer-research-scandal bubble of the late 1990s, so analysts were receiving eye-popping offers from other firms. A new Director of Research, more money elsewhere, and a public vote of no-confidence. Our attrition rate soared."

How did she get through it?

She lists five ways: by realizing that pretending things were 100% A-OK was a losing strategy ("Candor went a long way with the team," she writes); by "identifying a path out of our issues" (which, in her case, was to hire "as many outstanding new analysts as we could find to replenish the pipeline"); by communicating the new strategy and communicating confidence in it — repeatedly; by regularly updating her team on progress; and by always being available to her analysts — by "walking the floor a lot; by working my tail off."

Krawcheck writes: "You don't gain a team's confidence in a day, and perhaps particularly during periods of turbulence. But, slowly, slowly, as we kept a focus

8 super-successful people share their biggest leadership secrets

5. Craig Newmark: Pass the torch if you know you don't have what it takes.

Craig Newmark (right). "Leadership? I'm not sure what that is," the Craigslist founder writes. He says in 2000, upon realizing he "sucked" as a manager, he hired a new CEO who would do a much better job.

"Suckage, in this case, is relative to my own standards. In this case, I was thinking that I was average, and the Craigslist community needs better," Newmark writes.

While a cliché, he advises, "hire the smartest people you can find, and get outta the way." He says he clearly remembers "a number of staff people approaching me for decisions in really difficult areas, like in personnel, and that I wasn't acting decisively in critical areas, like geographic growth.

"That tied into my general observation that I had, and have, a problem with procrastination. (Still do, but I'll deal with that later.) I removed myself from management completely."

6. Claire Diaz-Ortiz: Find an anchor — or three.

innovation manager Claire Diaz-Ortiz. Having been with Twitter since the early days, "The Woman Who Got the Pope on Twitter" knows a thing or two about weathering the storms of startup life.

Now Twitter's manager of social innovation, Diaz-Ortiz says her secret to "staying Zen" amid constant institutional change is to not have just one mentor — have three. "The best thing you can do if you're not sure what team you'll be on tomorrow is to find an anchor in a great mentor or professional champion," she writes. But in a constantly shifting landscape, one mentor isn't enough. People move on, get transferred, get fired — and you've got to be prepared.

The same goes for finding an "outlet" — a work buddy with whom you can "talk shop and share your woes in equal measure," she explains. One is good, but three is better. The bottom line: To stay sane, cultivate relationships with the people around you.

8 super-successful people share their biggest leadership secrets

7. Maynard Webb: Lead with intensity, not intimidation.

Yahoo chairman and former eBay COO Maynard Webb. As Yahoo! chairman and former eBay COO, Maynard Webb has lead companies in good times and in bad. In times of growth, he can focus on inspiring teams to find the best possible answers. But while crisis may call for "a different kind of leader-ship," Webb has learned that it's possible to turn up his intensity without invoking fear.

His strategy for leading a team through turbulence? Not so different than leading a team the rest of the time, he's discovered.

When the waters are rougher, he prioritizes consistent communication, clear objectives, and regular (and prompt) performance feedback. He also works hard to stay patient ("losing your temper is never a fine moment,") and strives to see situations from his employees' point of view. Carrie Schwab-Pomerantz: It's not about you.

President, Charles Schwab Foundation, and Senior Vice President, Schwab Community Services. Charles Schwab SVP and president of the Charles Schwab Foundation says in her LinkedIn post that being a great leader isn't about you — it's about helping the people around you achieve great things.

It may be a cliché, but it's a cliché for a reason: "You're only as good as your team," Schwab-Pomerantz says. Being a good leader doesn't mean you have to be the first, "or even the best," she observes. "What you need is the courage to bring out the best in others — to help them improve their skills and opportunities."

That can mean putting your own ego (and biases) aside. "You're not looking for people who are just like you," she explains. "You're looking for people who are better than you in certain areas." For inspiration, she looks no further than President Lincoln, who famously appointed his chief rivals to his cabinet. "Lincoln understood that surrounding himself with the best people was the key to accomplishing his own goals."

The New Scammers Tricks

More than three million people in the UK are the victims of scams every year. Many of them lose hundreds or even thousands of pounds, after being taken in by sophisticated scams and devious criminal gangs. This month is Scams Awareness Month, which aims to raise awareness of scams, and encourage people to be on their guard.

There are thousands of different scams doing the rounds, ranging from fake lotteries and prize draws to investment schemes, attempts to get hold of your financial details, and even tricks designed to get you to transfer your money into the criminal gang's bank account.

It's difficult to stay on top of each variation, so another option is to be aware of how these criminals tend to get into your home, so you can be on your guard.

Cold Internet Connections

This is still the most common way that criminals will get in contact through Skype, whatsapp, here are some of the very latest common scams run by scammers. This includes boiler room scams - which involve calling people and using high-pressure sales techniques to get you to invest in something essentially worthless. They take an average of £5,000 $7.000 from each victim, so they will put time and effort into convincing you that their scam is a legitimate investment.

Gold and Diamond

Lets start with the gold scammers, we have found that many scammers know that its impossible to use the old scam's by presenting pictures of gold and diamonds and ask the investor to help them with the cost of their taxes and carriage cost.

This might be the case 2 to 3 years ago but in most of the African countries there are real buyers on the ground that will cover all these cost, so their new tactic is to build up the investors confident by saying that their prepared to pay all the CIF cost, but the investor will need to cover the Hotel and refinery cost, in some ways this seems to be acceptable at the time, the good scammers will build up you confidence in discussions and even send you documents related to the CIF Shipment, until the 12 hour surprise which will come, where they will be asking for fund due to unforeseen circumstances.

Vishing

Another common phone scam is vishing - where they pretend to be from your bank, or the police, and warn you there has been fraud on your account. They then persuade you to transfer your money into a 'safe' account. If you do as they say, you are actually transferring your money into their account.

A variation on this theme is to tell you that there has been fraud on your account, so they are sending round a courier to pick your card up. They then take the card and go on a spending spree. The best way to protect you from all of these is never to believe anything you are told on a cold call, and to hang up.

The New Scammers Tricks

Internet Scams

We live so much of our life online that unsurprisingly the criminals have identified some weak spots they can exploit. The criminals may set up a fake website, holiday listing, payment site, or auction sale, and persuade you to part with your money for anything from tickets to cars, mobile phones and holidays. Then they disappear without a trace.

To protect yourself, you need to be sure that you only deal with reputable companies that you know well and trust online. If you are using someone you do not know, make sure you do it through a site that offers full protection from scammers.

Rogue Company Traders

These criminals have a range of calling services that will contact companies or yourself, by persuading you that you need their services - they have a commonly target the elderly and the vulnerable. The most common version of this scam is to say you need corporative or personal building work done.

Then they demand payment upfront, and then either deliver a shoddy service, or disappear. The best advice is never to buy anything on the doorstep, and never to let anyone into your office or home unless you already know and trust them.

They persuade you to contact them

Traditionally scammers put advertisements around town, offering you money to work from home or a special diet product. You would have to pay them for your introductory pack, and either you would pay and they would disappear, or you would receive something essentially useless.

Nowadays criminals also use online adverts. These can include debt management scams (where they take a fee and just refer you to a payday loan company), job scams (where you are offered a 'job' for moving cash around on their behalf so you are essentially money laundering), and scams with pop up adverts warning you that you have a computer virus, and persuading you to call a firm who will charge you to 'fix' a problem that never existed.

It's important to be aware of these specific cons and to bear in mind that one of the best ways to protect yourself is to assume that if something appears too good to be true, then it probably is. In fact the Metropolitan Police publishes a Big Book of Scams, and suggests ten golden rules to help you beat the scammers:

Golden rules

1. Be suspicious of anything that seems 'too good to be true'

2. Do not agree to offers or deals immediately. Insist on taking your time to consider it and take advice.

3. Do not hand over money or sign anything until you have done some research on the company you are dealing with

4. Never send any money to anyone you don't know or trust or use methods of payment you are not comfortable with

- 5. Never give banking information to anyone you don't know or trust
- 6. Always log onto a website direct, rather than clicking a link on an email
- 7. Do not rely on testimonials, get solid proof of a company's performance
- 8. Get independent advice if an offer involves your money or time
- 9. If you have been scammed or spot a scam call Action Fraud. Contact Interpol in your

gold-mining countries

Gold is mined in around 90 countries worldwide. Some of the countries that historically have been top producers continue to be so, including Australia, USA and South Africa. But China is now the world's top producer, having increased productivity significantly since 2005.

Australia

Australia continues to be at the forefront of world gold production. From being the fourth largest producer of gold in 2008, Australia's production has surged to secure the country's position as the world's second largest producer of gold in both 2009 and 2010.

Western Australia is responsible for 75% of Australia's gold production and also hosts approximately two thirds of Australia's 4,500 tonnes of estimated gold resources. Western Australia's State Government received royalties from mining of some US$5.14 billion.

Australia has consistently been one of the world's largest producers of gold since its first gold rush, centred on Victoria in 1851. During the 1850's, Australia was producing some 40% of the world's gold. The immigration sparked by the rush, fuelled further agricultural and industrial development and saw nearly 500,000 people attracted to the state of Victoria.

China

As well as being the world's largest producer of gold, China represents one of the most significant markets for gold consumption.

As well as being the world's largest producer of gold, China represents one of the most significant markets for gold consumption. In 2011, China was second only to India in this regard with demand for 779.8 tonnes of gold, a 22% increase on the previous year. China is also a significant holder of gold reserves, currently behind only USA, Germany, the IMF, Italy and France.

60% of Chinese gold production comes from five provinces: Shandong, Henan, Jiangxi, Yunnan and Fujian. Although China has a large number of relatively small operating mines, consolidation has reduced the number of producing entities from 1,200 in 2002 to 700 at the end of 2010. The country's largest producer is Zijin Mining Company, whose Zijinshan Gold & Copper Mine is the single largest gold producer.

Ghana

Known during colonial days, as the Gold Coast, with independence in 1957 the country opted for the name Ghana.

Gold production accounts for more than 90% of Ghana's current total mineral output. Ghana is the second largest African gold producer and the eighth largest globally. Gold overtook cocoa as Ghana's principal export in 1991 and the IMF estimates that by 2014, gold mining will contribute around $3.8bn to Ghana's balance of payments. However, by this time, gold's status as Ghana's principal export may have been displaced by oil and gas production.

In 2010, tax collected from the mining sector by the Ghanaian Revenue Authority totalled £$170 million, 24% of all company tax collected.

The Ghanaian Government holds a 10% stake in six of the ten large scale mines currently operating in Ghana. These include partnerships with Newmont (the Ahafo mine), Golden Star Resources (Bogosu) and Gold Fields (Tarkwa).

Indonesia

Although Indonesia currently produces less gold than Peru, it is estimated to have nearly four times the amount of gold reserves of Peru: 82.9 Moz compared with 21.1 Moz. Although in recent years Indonesia has seen a decline in production, almost half of its output comes from the giant Grasberg, copper-gold operation in Western Papua. Grasberg is thought to hold the world's largest gold reserves, estimated at some 67.4 Moz.

Large scale mining companies operating in Indonesia include: Freeport McMoran (the majority owner of Grasberg,), Newcrest (who partially own the Kencana mine) and Newmont (who partially own the Batu Hijau mine). In total there are six large scale mines currently operating in Indonesia, with a seventh – Martabe – under construction and expected to begin operation during 2012.

South Africa

South Africa dominated global gold production in the Twentieth Century and in one year – 1970 - accounted for 79% of the entire world's production. It is estimated that South Africa has produced some 40,000 tonnes of gold since the start of recorded history – about one third of the total worldwide.

There are 35 large-scale gold mines currently operating in South Africa, including the record setting TauTona mine, which extends 3.9km (approximately 2.5 miles) underground. TauTona means 'great lion' in Setswanan.

Cape Town, South Africa, plays host to the annual Indaba Mining Conference, one of the largest gathering of mining stakeholders, which attracts nearly 10,000 people representing more than 1000 companies.

In the coming years, this is expected to increase, with these large mines anticipated to become even greater contributors to Tanzania's tax income, paying potentially 6-8% of all government tax revenues by 2017.

Historically, three quarters of United States gold has come from just five states. Historically, three quarters of United States gold has come from just five states: Nevada, Alaska, California, Colorado and South Dakota. Today, despite being known as the 'Silver State', Nevada is responsible for some 74% of the United States' total production of gold, contributing more than 10% of State GDP.

The United States is the world's biggest holder of sovereign reserves of gold, with nearly 26% of the world's totals. The United States bullion depository, more commonly known as Fort Knox is well associated with gold in popular culture, but more gold is actually stored by the Federal Reserve in New York.

The Myo Armband will to do away with your computer mouse

Wearable computing tech on the way that allows you to control your machine with a flick of the wrist.

Causing a stir on the internet is a new wearable device known as the Myo. Coming from startup Thalamic Labs the Myo is a one-size-fits-all armband that can be used to interact with your computer by simply moving your arm around.

The Myo is capable of measuring the motion and electrical activity of the wearers arm, allowing it to differentiate specific hand gestures. The device has already been set up for a few common mouse commands such as a mouse click, double click and scroll.

Myo is planned to work with Windows, Mac, Android or iOS device and is currently available to pre-order for a September release at the price of $149.

Review: BT Smart Home Cam 100

The BT Smart Cam is a WiFi home video monitoring device capable of streaming and capturing footage in high definition.

Upon receiving the BT Smart Home Cam I was a little skeptical, despite having a very sleek design it didn't look too different from the average webcam, if maybe a bit bulkier. So I was curious as to what the device could really offer me as opposed to a much cheaper webcam.

Move objects with your mind

This funky-looking brain cap provides another favorite superpower: the ability to move objects using only your mind. Unlike the robot exoskeleton, this strange headgear allows the wearer to control a host of objects, depending on its programming. University of Maryland researchers designed it to help people with physical disabilities -- like paralysis -- gain more mobility, use computers, operate motorized wheelchairs or even control prosthetic limbs. The cap works using EEG technology to read the wearer's brain waves in a non-invasive way that is also easy to use -- no need for a costume change at a telephone booth.

Hulk strength

This robot exoskeleton is a different kind of suit, with a different kind of super power. Cyberdyne's HAL suit gives its wearer superhuman strength, enabling one to carry extremely heavy loads while simultaneously defending the body against deadly radiation. That in itself makes this robotic suit seem pretty cool, but the best part is how it works. The suit uses a network of sensors to monitor the electric impulses coming from the wearer's brain (using electroencephalography or EEG) to make the suit ambulatory. This means -- you guessed it -- you operate the suit with mind control. The makers designed it this way so the wearer wouldn't be burdened by the weight of the suit, which comes in around 130 pounds. Instead, the suit "walks" with you so it's easier to say "Hasta la vista, baby."

Coolest Innovations

Scale tall buildings

This contraption won't help you leap tall buildings in a single bound, but it will help you scale the walls. A clever then-13-year-old boy used recycled vacuum cleaners to gain spider abilities, just like his favorite superhero Spider-Man. Despite skepticism from his parents, teachers and classmates, Hibiki Kono followed his dream and created a backpack-mounted climbing apparatus, which he uses to scale tall brick walls. The adults around him make him use a crash pad, just in case, but we don't think he's ever fallen. The one caveat, aside from the noise, is that Kono can only climb as high as the power cord will reach.

Communicate with animals

If you have pets, there's a good chance you've wished at one point in time or another that you could speak with them in a language you both understand. Just what is your dog thinking when he rolls around the rug on his back? Does she really hate the mail carrier as much as she seems to? This cool headset allows us to understand what animals are thinking -- finally! It works by reading your critter's brainwaves and then actually translating them into human language. This project ran a successful crowdfunding campaign in 2013 and we're not sure what stage of development it's in except for "in progress."

The biggest Oil lift in the North Sea

How do you go about removing a massive piece of infrastructure from a hostile environment like the North Sea?

Oil giant Shell has come up with one answer which could be put to the test next year - using a mega-ship to remove the topside of an oil platform in a single lift.

Measuring 300m from the seabed to its highest point, the Brent Delta platform stands as tall as the Eiffel Tower.

The structure, one of four located in the Brent field, is located 115 miles out to sea off Shetland. It has reached the end of its production life after 35 years.

At its peak in 1982, the Brent field produced more than half a million barrels of oil per day. Production that year would have met the annual energy needs of around half of all

UK homes.

Plans have been drawn up by operator Shell to decommission Delta, and a new giant Korean-built ship has been lined up to take on the first major challenge.

At 382m long - the length of five jumbo jets - Pioneering Spirit has been tasked with removing the Delta's 24,000-tonne topside. That's the part of the platform which houses the accommodation block, helipad and other operational areas.

'Hostile environments'

On its website, the company says: "Analysis has shown that in hostile environments such as the North Sea, a motion compensation system is essential on a single-lift vessel to eliminate impact forces on large topsides.

"In the absence of such a system, local damage can occur even when the wave height is small and vessel motions are very limited."

Shell considered two other options for the Delta topside before choosing the single lift.

One was a process known as "piece small," which involves cutting the topside into small pieces - each weighing between 10kg and 100kg - and shipping them back to shore.

The second option, "reverse install," involves cutting and removing large sections or modules in the reverse order from which they were installed.

Shell argues that its single-lift proposals will reduce time, costs and environmental risks associated with the decommissioning process.

What Are CONFLICT DIAMONDS?

What is a conflict diamond?

Conflict diamonds, also known as blood diamonds, war diamonds, or converted diamonds, are defined by the United Nations as "diamonds that originate from areas controlled by forces or factions opposed to legitimate and internationally recognized governments, and are used to fund military action in opposition to those governments..." Essentially, these diamonds are mined and sold in wartorn areas, with the profits used to fund violent rebellions.

Where do conflict diamonds come from?

The vast majority of conflict diamonds come from countries in southern and western Africa. The first reports of conflict diamonds were published in 1998 by Global Witness, and revealed the role that diamonds played in funding the rebels of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) in their war against the government. Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and Sierra Leone are the most widely mentioned countries of origin for conflict diamonds, although other African countries including Côte d'Ivoire, Zimbabwe, and Liberia have also been involved in the practice.

What's being done about it?

In 2003, the UN established the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme (KPCS) to prevent the proliferation and sale of conflict diamonds. The diamond industry is very serious about self-policing at all levels of the supply chain. All major rough diamond producers, exporters, and importers are now members of the KPCS, and any diamond dealer who is found to be non-compliant is often blacklisted. Their reputation is severely damaged, and dealers and jewelers will be very hesitant to do business with them. Despite criticism, the Kimberley Process has been quite successful in increasing sales of legal diamonds and discouraging the trade of conflict diamonds.

How many conflict diamonds are out there?

Once a diamond is cut, it is very difficult to tell where it came from. However, the number of conflict diamonds in circulation has drastically decreased over the past twenty years. At the peak of the Sierra Leone conflict, it is estimated that conflict diamonds accounted for between 4% and 15% of the global diamond trade. Currently, the World Diamond Council claims that less than 1% of diamonds are conflict diamonds.

How can I make sure my diamond isn't a conflict diamond?

Some retailers, like Brilliant Earth, specialize in conflict-free diamonds. If a jeweler is compliant with the Kimberley Process, he or she should be able to show you a diamond's System of Warranties statement. You don't have to avoid all diamonds from Africa; in fact, many of these countries rely on the legal diamond trade to finance schools, infrastructure, and growth. When diamond shopping, ask the store owner about the process it uses to guarantee its diamonds are conflict-free. He or she

Buying Diamonds In a Better World

The Kimberley Process was established to halt human rights abuses resulting from rebel groups using the profits of diamonds to fund their wars or coup d'états. Its 54 members come from 90 countries and account for almost 100% of the global trade in rough diamonds. The scheme was set up to ensure the international supply of diamonds didn't come from warlords. It has helped stem millions of dollars to would-be rebels.

Diamonds, from Pits to Depths

Several international mining corporations have established regional headquarters in Botswana and are looking for diamonds, uranium, gold and oil. Many have come back with positive results. Galane Gold Ltd announced that it has kicked off its first ore exploration from Tau underground in the northern part of the country.

Galane Gold or GG is a Toronto-based investment firm, an unhedged gold producer and explorer acting in mining operation and exploration in the Republic of Botswana. It is a publically traded company which is listed on both the TSX Venture Exchange and the Botswana Stock Exchange. Galane Gold has already had several extensive exhibitions in the management of mining and exploring programs.

"This gold exploration is an expected evolution in order to improve the company's performance," GG said. The firm contributes with senior professional employees, who are committed to respect the environment and the communities in which they work.

At the beginning, GG didn't have the intention to pursue the resource of gold in Tau through underground mining. It started the project in the fourth quarter of 2013 and has finished its forced portal entry at the bottom of the existing Tau pit and the installation of the entire infrastructure required for the exploration. The company has put a graphical presentation of the detailed mining plan on the reported resource to mine about 85,000 ounces of gold over the next three years.

Ravi Sood, the Chief executive officer of Galane Gold, stated, "This project is a major step in the evolution of the company both with regards to a change from open pit mining to underground mining and our plans to extend mine life through further exploration." He then added, "We have completed this project within six months and from our own operating cash-flows is a testament to the experienced management team that we have put in place."

Botswana is ranked as the best investment jurisdiction in Africa, according to World Bank Global Investment Benchmarking Report. According to the Fraser Institute Global survey of Mining Companies best African mining jurisdiction and the seventh best mining country globally. It also has a strong economic environment. In fact, Botswana is regarded as the best mining country in Africa. It has political stability and strong GDP growth. Its status as an English speaking country is why Multinational firms such as Galane Gold can operate on its ground. The Australian firm, Gallery Gold, however, has also its entire exploration of Gold in the country. The company's most prospect exploration was the Mupane Gold Mine which officially opened in February 2005, will produce approximately 100,000 ounces of gold per year. Apart from that, Botswana is an emerging mining powerhouse.
