Credit Suisse Avoids Death in U.S. and Pays $2.6 Billion Fine, But UBS Was Luckier

Credit Suisse—not just a subsidiary but the parent—has plead guilty of conspiring to help Americans evade taxes. Plus, Switzerland's second-largest bank more than triples the $780 million fine UBS paid over similar charges. But while UBS got off with a deferred prosecution agreement—criminal charges against it were quietly dropped in 2010—Switzerland's Number 2 bank will carry a felony conviction.

Some heads will surely roll, but perhaps not CEO Brady Dougan and Chairman Urs Rohner. UBS changed top management after its deal, and this one is far bigger and involves a guilty plea to criminal charges. But whatever the cost, the key benefit for Credit Suisse is getting the inevitable deal behind it and still being allowed to operate in the U.S.

Even so, pleading guilty to a crime carries a taint, so there is speculation over whether the bank's ratings or business will suffer.

Yet in Switzerland, where bank secrecy used to prevail, concepts of what violates Swiss law have metamorphosed in recent years. The IRS took on Swiss banking and won. And that is that. The important thing seems to be to move on.

The IRS wins big. Plus, the IRS earns dividends in the form of account holders applying for amnesty. And for the IRS, it isn't just Switzerland, but everywhere now that FATCA has expanded U.S. tentacles almost worldwide. Attorney General Eric Holder wins big too, getting the benefit of a guilty plea. He can't be accused of letting another big bank off the hook for being too big to fail.

The U.S. Treasury and New York State both make out well. Credit Suisse will pay nearly $1.8 billion to the Justice Department, $100 to the Federal Reserve, and a whopping $715 million to New York's Department of Financial Services.

The latter is a particularly big winner, particularly considering that it was the newest entrant in the hunt for Credit Suisse. It only recently queried the bank's statements to New York authorities.

But New York regulators have some authority to revoke licenses in the wake of a criminal conviction. Having the clout to revoke a bank's license to operate in New York is a big stick. It could give New York's Department of Financial Services and chief Benjamin Lawsky even more power in the future.

Credit Suisse Avoids Death in U.S. and Pays $2.6 Billion Fine, But UBS Was Luckier

Under the deal, Credit Suisse's parent must plead guilty to a conspiracy charge, admitting that it fostered U.S. tax evasion. That may sound similar to what UBS said, but for UBS it was in a deferred prosecution agreement, not a guilty plea.

UBS also turned over accounts and names. It seems hard to imagine that Credit Suisse will not be forced to as well.

The UBS deal launched a raft of IRS disclosure initiatives that netted the U.S. billions in taxes and penalties.

But a parade of sheepish Swiss banks took a deal that means full disclosure of American accounts and tiers of fines depending on how aggressively the banks behaved. The deal was not offered to the 14 Swiss banks under U.S. investigation, but 106 Swiss institutions took the IRS deal by the Dec. 31, 2013, deadline.

The experience of UBS, Wegelin and Bank Frey surely meant resistance would be expensive, futile or both. For Credit Suisse and other ineligible banks, though, the pressure was mounting.

The U.S. indicted current and former Credit Suisse bankers, and Credit Suisse had already struck a $196.5 million deal with the SEC over cross-border brokerage and investment services to U.S. clients. There too, Credit Suisse admitted wrongdoing.

Credit Suisse recently set aside 425 million francs ($476 million) to settle the Justice Department probe, in addition to 295 million francs for U.S. tax matters in 2011. But as it's turned out, much bigger dollars will be sent stateside.

Will central banks need to buy Gold back from the Market?

There is a belief that central bank gold in the custody of the world's leading central banks such as the Fed, the Bank of England and the Banque de France has been leased out to the market. Central Banks have confirmed this, but it remains a source of contention. Even where the gold of the world's central banks are held in the world's leading central banks in a custodial arrangement this is so and it is reasonable to assume that this could not be done without the gold's owner's permission. This is what we do know;

In the first "Washington Agreement" and repeated in subsequent Central Bank Gold Agreements [from 1999 to now and onto September 26th 2014], a principle laid down in these agreements was;

"The signatories to this agreement have agreed not to expand their gold leasings and their use of gold futures and options over this period."

Does this mean that existing leases, once matured would not be 'rolled over'? Or does it mean that the total number of leases covering a specific volume of gold would be 'rolled over' but not increased in volume?

We think the latter, because the German Bundesbank was one of the signatories to all the Central Gold Agreements. Germany has requested that 150 tonnes of its gold be repatriated and has been told this will take seven years to achieve. The difficulty in repatriating this gold is not in transporting that much gold, but clearly in receiving back the gold leased out to the market. Last year saw only five tonnes of this gold make its way home to Germany. We believe that all the signatories of the Central Bank Gold Agreements are in the same position as Germany with all their gold currently leased into the gold market.

Apart from Germany, which other central banks agreed to these terms in these agreements?

The signatories to the gold agreements were;

Oesterreichische National bank - Banque Nationale de Belgique - Suomen Pankki - Banca d'Italia - Banque centrale de Luxembourg - De Nederlandsche Bank - Banque de France - Deutsche Bundesbank - Central Bank of Ireland - Banco do Portugal - Banco de Espana - Sveriges Riksbank - Schweizerische Nationalbank - Bank of England - European Central Bank

www.femagazine.co.uk

Will central banks need to buy Gold back from the Market?

We can draw the conclusion that there have been no increases in leasing futures and options overall since 1999 because none of them have increased their gold holdings in that period, but at that time the amount of gold leased into the market was all the gold in their reserves [so as to make a modest income on the holdings]. Why and how can we draw this conclusion?

If this was not so, why could the central banks holding Germany's gold, not deliver the tonnage of gold asked for by Germany immediately? If only a portion of that gold had been leased the balance not leased could have been delivered. But instead, only 5 tonnes of gold has been delivered back to Germany. The implication can only have one explanation and that is that all of it has been leased and only five tonnes of it has been returned to the Bundesbank. Some might argue that the gold needs to be re-refined. If that were the case then re-refining this gold would have produced far more than five tonnes in the last year.

The clause in the Gold Agreements looks very much like attempts to misdirect our attention into thinking that only a portion of that gold had been leased.

This has become even more apparent now that the details of the next Central Bank Gold Agreement have been released. No mention of leasing was made!

Where to store central bank gold

Gold investors may have thought that central banks hold and should hold their gold at home in their own central bank's vaults. The reason central banks have gold in their reserves, in the first place is that if their local currency lost credibility internationally, they could turn to gold, in such extreme times.

If that gold were at home, its ability to act as collateral or even to pay the nation's bills would be impaired, because it would have to be shipped to potential creditors first. By holding gold outside the nation it is instantly available. That is, provided it is not leased out. Yes, creditors may well accept the ownership transfer of leased gold because the owner's ability to access it would have been removed, already. But it would lessen its accessibility, unless it was accepted practice that central bank gold almost in its entirety was leased!

The clear conclusion and only one that can be reached is that inevitably, all the gold of Germany and that of other nations held outside their borders is leased out.

www.femagazine.co.uk

Will central banks need to buy Gold back from the Market?

Counter-parties to central banks

Who are the institutions to whom central banks lease their gold? They are the market makers, the Bullion Banks, who then onward lease the gold into the market to various counter-parties. It is very possible that if the gold price were to take off, these counter-parties would not be able to retrieve or buy sufficient gold to return the gold they leased. After all, China has absorbed so much of the gold available on the open market and elsewhere, particularly in the last year.

So as to understand what potential situations could come about in the gold market we look back at the de-hedging process that took place among the gold mines who had hedged their production since 1985 through to 2005.

Parallel situations – De Hedging

Gold mining companies found such a situation after the gold price moved up through $400 levels. It was at these levels that they had hedged their gold as the gold price was falling back from $850 to its low of $275 in 1999. Once the gold price moved through $400, the hedged position began to lose out on the rising gold price, much to the ire of their shareholders. To keep hold of such hedges would then have meant lost opportunities on the hedges and charges of speculation by gold mine executives. The gold miners who had hedged future production covered the broad spectrum of the gold mining community.

In all, the gold mines needed to find around 3,000 tonnes to de-hedge their positions completely. The gold market by itself did not have enough gold to accommodate the mining companies. Gold production was not rising, nor has it, despite the huge jump in the gold price. This was because of the huge cost rises and political risks that had grown over time in the gold market. The accelerated production of gold since 1985 had plucked all the 'low hanging fruit' of gold deposits during that time. The same situation applies today.

This is where the central banks stepped in. Under the "Washington Agreement" and the subsequent two other Central Bank Gold Agreements, they came to the miner's rescue through their sales of gold at 400 or 500 tonnes a year up until 2009 when the gold mining companies completed their de-hedging. That covered not just 3,000 tonnes of gold but saw the gold price run up from $400 to $1,200. In 2009 it was no coincidence that these European central banks stopped selling and all central bank selling of gold came to a halt. Central banks were wise in announcing the sales they did from 1999 onwards as this disguised the rescue of these gold miners very well.

Will central banks need to buy Gold back from the Market?

Failing Counter-parties to leased gold agreements

Now we see the central banks of the world fully committed to leasing gold as a source of income. But the volumes we are talking about could approach up to the entire gold holdings of the world's central banks, amounting to over 30,000 tonnes.

Imagine if the gold price broke out to record highs over $2,000 an ounce or higher. How many of the current counter-parties to the leased gold deals would need to get hold of it in any way possible? We believe that the picture would parallel that seen amongst the miners in the first decade of this century.

We expect that not just the counter-parties could be bankrupt but the bullion banks too. In turn the central banks would have to admit huge losses on their gold reserves, destabilizing the entire financial system.

And, this time round, there would be no other central banks to come to their rescue with supplies of gold! The gold market itself certainly does not have enough gold [annual production 2,800± tonnes per year] available. Even a massively spiraling gold price would not produce sufficient quantities of gold to cover even a small proportion of this leased gold. The hunt for ounces of gold would be on.

This is where they need to find their gold from places other than the gold market. There is only one other place where they can attempt to source the gold from and that's from you and other gold investors, dealers and custodians!

FE Diamond News Diamonds, from Pits to Depths

Several international mining corporations have established regional headquarters in Botswana and are looking for diamonds, uranium, gold and oil. Many have come back with positive results. Galane Gold Ltd announced that it has kicked off its first ore exploration from Tau underground in the northern part of the country.

Galane Gold or GG is a Toronto-based investment firm, an unhedged gold producer and explorer acting in mining operation and exploration in the Republic of Botswana. It is a publicly traded company which is listed on both the TSX Venture Exchange and the Botswana Stock Exchange. Galane Gold has already had several extensive exhibitions in the management of mining and exploring programs.

"This gold exploration is an expected evolution in order to improve the company's performance," GG said. The firm contributes with senior professional employees, who are committed to respect the environment and the communities in which they work.

At the beginning, GG didn't have the intention to pursue the resource of gold in Tau through underground mining. It started the project in the fourth quarter of 2013 and has finished its forced portal entry at the bottom of the existing Tau pit and the installation of the entire infrastructure required for the exploration. The company has put a graphical presentation of the detailed mining plan on the reported resource to mine about 85,000 ounces of gold over the next three years.

Ravi Sood, the Chief executive officer of Galane Gold, stated, "This project is a major step in the evolution of the company both with regards to a change from open pit mining to underground mining and our plans to extend mine life through further exploration." He then added, "We have completed this project within six months and from our own operating cash-flows is a testament to the experienced management team that we have put in place."

Botswana is ranked as the best investment jurisdiction in Africa, according to World Bank Global Investment Benchmarking Report. According to the Fraser Institute Global survey of Mining Companies best African mining jurisdiction and the seventh best mining country globally. It also has a strong economic environment. In fact, Botswana is regarded as the best mining country in Africa. It has political stability and strong GDP growth. Its status as an English speaking country is why Multinational firms such as Galane Gold can operate on its ground. The Australian firm, Gallery Gold, however, has also its entire exploration of Gold in the country. The company's most prospect exploration was the Mupane Gold Mine which officially opened in February 2005, will produce approximately 100,000 ounces of gold per year. Apart from that, Botswana is an emerging mining powerhouse.

Gold price rigging fears put investors on alert

Global gold prices may have been manipulated on 50 per cent of occasions between January 2010 and December 2013, according to analysis by Fideres, a consultancy.

The findings come amid a probe by German and UK regulators into alleged manipulation of the gold price, which is set twice a day by Deutsche Bank, HSBC, Barclays, Bank of Nova Scotia and Societal Générale in a process known as the “London gold fixing”.

Fideres’ research found the gold price frequently climbs (or falls) once a twice-daily conference call between the five banks begins, peaks (or troughs) almost exactly as the call ends and then experiences a sharp reversal, a pattern it alleged may be evidence of “collusive behaviour”.

“[This] is indicative of panel banks pushing the gold price upwards on the basis of a strategy that was likely predetermined before the start of the call in order to benefit their existing positions or pending orders,” Fideres concluded.

“The behaviour of the gold price is very suspicious in 50 per cent of cases. This is not something you would expect to see if you take into account normal market factors,” said Alberto Thomas, a partner at Fideres.

Alasdair Macleod, head of research at GoldMoney, a dealer in physical gold, added: “When the banks fix the price, the advantage they have is that they know what orders they have in the pocket. There is a possibility that they are gaming the system.”

Pension funds, hedge funds, commodity trading advisers and futures traders are most likely to have suffered losses as a result, according to Mr Thomas, who said that many of these groups were “definitely ready” to file lawsuits.

Daniel Brockett, a partner at law firm Quinn Emanuel, also said he had spoken to several investors concerned about potential losses.

US regulator sues 16 banks for alleged Libor rigging

US regulator has sued 16 banks for allegedly manipulating the London interbank offered rate (Libor).

The Libor rate is used to set trillions of dollars of financial contracts, including mortgages and financial transactions around the world.

The regulator said the manipulation caused substantial losses to 38 US banks which were shut down during and after the 2008 financial crisis.

The sued banks include Barclays, HSBC, Citigroup and Royal Bank of Scotland. The British Bankers' Association (BBA) has also been sued by the regulator - the US Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC).

"BBA participated in the alleged scheme to protect the revenue stream it generated from selling Libor licenses and to appease the Panel Bank Defendants that were members of the BBA," it was quoted as saying by the AFP news agency.

The FDIC alleged that the banks mentioned in its lawsuit rigged the rate from August 2007 to at least mid-2011.

Other banks named in the lawsuit include Bank of America, JPMorgan Chase, Deutsche Bank, Lloyds Bank, Credit Suisse, UBS, and Rabobank

Growing pressure

Libor is the average rate at which banks lend money to one another and is decided on a daily basis.

Most of the world's biggest banks contribute estimates to form the Libor. But there have been allegations that some have looked to profit from it by understating or overstating their submissions.

Over the past two years, regulators across the globe have been investigating the manipulation of the rate and there have been $3.7bn (£2.26bn) in fines to date.

A string of international banks and brokers, including Barclays and the Royal Bank of Scotland, have faced both criminal and civil penalties for their involvement in the scandal. Some banks have also been found to have understated their submissions in the period during and after the financial crisis.

They did so in order to avoid the perception that they were having to borrow at higher interest rates than their peers and might therefore be in financial difficulty.

US regulator sues 16 banks for alleged Libor rigging

The body is to change how the key Libor interest rate is set, in order to avoid a repeat of last year's rigging scandal.

The British Bankers' Association (BBA) said publication of banks' individual submissions would be embargoed for three months to avoid "manipulation".

The Libor rate is used to set trillions of dollars of financial contracts, including many mortgages.

The change, after a review by the government, will start on 1 July.

The bank submissions will "remain available in real-time to the Libor benchmark administrators, for the purposes of calculating the rate and for monitoring and surveillance".

However, individual banks will no longer be able to see each others' estimates of their borrowing costs - which are used to calculate Libor - on the day of submission.

Last year, Barclays was fined £290m ($454m) by British and US regulators for manipulation of Libor and Euribor interbank rates between 2005 and 2009.

Several other banks have also been implicated in the scandal. They were found to have colluded in fixing the Libor setting in order to boost the profits of traders prior to the financial crisis.

Individual banks were also found to have under-stated their submissions in the period during and after the crisis, in order to avoid the perception that they were having to borrow at higher interest rates than their peers and might therefore be in financial difficulty.

The London Inter-bank Offered Rate (Libor) is currently set in London and is meant to reflect the average rate that banks pay to lend to each other.

It is used to benchmark everything from car loans and mortgages to complex financial transactions around the world.

It is currently set each day by the BBA based on estimates received from 16 major international banks in London of how much they must pay in order to borrow cash from other banks. Euribor is the eurozone equivalent of Libor.

10 Great miscalculations error

The discovery by the French state-owned railway company SNCF that 2,000 new trains are too wide for many station platforms is embarrassing, but far from the first time a small mis-measurement or miscalculation has had serious repercussions.

The French fiasco has been blamed by SNCF on the national rail operator RFF. But sometimes there is no-one else to share responsibility. Here are 10 examples where a little error has proved very expensive, or even fatal.

1. The Mars Climate Orbiter

Designed to orbit Mars as the first interplanetary weather satellite, the Mars Orbiter was lost in 1999 because one Nasa team used imperial units while another used metric.

The $125m probe came too close to Mars as it tried to manoeuvre into orbit, and is thought to have been destroyed by the planet's atmosphere. An investigation said the "root cause" of the loss was the "failed translation of English units into metric units" in a piece of ground software.

2. The Vasa warship

In 1628, crowds in Sweden watched in horror as a new warship, Vasa, sank less than a mile into her maiden voyage, with the death of 30 people on board. Armed with 64 bronze cannons, it was considered by some to be the most powerful warship in the world. Experts who have studied it since it was raised in 1961 say it is asymmetrical, being thicker on the port side than the starboard side.

One reason for this could be that the workmen were using different systems of measurement. Archaeologists have found four rulers used by the workmen who built the ship. Two were calibrated in Swedish feet, which had 12 inches, while the other two measured Amsterdam feet, which had 11 inches.

10 Great miscalculations error

3. The "Gimli Glider"

In 1983, an Air Canada flight ran out of fuel above Gimli, Manitoba. Canada had switched to the metric system in 1970, and the plane is reported to have been Air Canada's first aircraft to use metric measurements.

The plane's on-board fuel gauge was not working, so the crew used measuring "dripsticks" to check how much fuel the plane took on during refuelling. Things went wrong when they converted this measurement of volume into one of weight. They got the number right, but the unit wrong - mistaking pounds of fuel for kilograms. As a result the plane was carrying about half as much fuel as they thought. Luckily, the pilot was able to land the plane safely on the Gimli runway, giving the plane the nickname "Gimli Glider".

4. The Hubble Space Telescope

The Hubble telescope is famous for its beautiful space images, and is considered a great success for Nasa. However, it got off to a very rocky start. The first images sent back by the telescope were fuzzy because the telescope's main mirror was too flat. It wasn't out by much - only 2.2 microns, or about 1/50th the thickness of a human hair - but this was enough to put the project in jeopardy. One theory is that a speck of paint on a device used to test the mirror resulted in distorted measurements. Luckily, scientists manage to fix the problem in 1993, using an instrument called the Corrective Optics Space Telescope Axial Replacement (Costar). This cancelled out the error in the main mirror, by matching it in reverse.

5. Big Ben

The Big Ben bell at the Houses of Parliament in London cracked during testing in 1857 and was melted down to be recast. But the new bell, winched into position over three days in 1859, also quickly cracked. Disputes raged over who was at fault - there was even a libel case. One theory is that the massive hammer, at 6.5 hundredweight, was too heavy - at least for the particular alloy the bell was made from (seven parts tin to 22 of copper). The foundries which cast the bells had always argued this material was too brittle. The second bell was not replaced (it is still cracked), just rotated by an eighth of a turn. The hammer, however, was replaced by a lighter one.

10 Great miscalculations error

6. Stonehenge model

In the 1984 mockumentary This is Spinal Tap, the members of a fictional rock group order a model of a Stonehenge megalith for their stage show - but the note written on a napkin mistakenly asks for a model 18 inches tall, instead of 18 feet. Curiously, and probably coincidentally, the British rock band Black Sabbath had experienced the opposite problem during its Born Again tour in 1983. Its replica of Stonehenge was so big, it got in the way of the band, and very few of the "stones" would fit on the stage.

One version of the story says there was a mix-up between metres and feet.

7. The Laufenburg bridge

What is sea level? It varies from one place to another, and different countries use different benchmarks. "For example, Britain has measured height in relation to mean sea levels in Cornwall, while France measures height in relation to sea levels in Marseille," says Dr Philip Woodworth, of the National Oceanography Centre Liverpool. Germany, for its part, measures height in relation to the North Sea, while Switzerland, like France, opts for the Mediterranean Sea.

This caused a problem in Laufenburg, a town that straddles Germany and Switzerland. As two halves of a new bridge grew closer to one another in 2003, it became clear that, instead of being at the same height "above sea level", one side was 54cm higher than the other. Builders knew that there was a 27cm between the two different versions of sea level - but somehow the difference was doubled, rather than cancelled out. The German side reportedly had to be lowered before the bridge could be completed.

10 Great miscalculations error

8. Scott's diet

The polar explorer Robert Falcon Scott made a fatal miscalculation about the amount of food his men would need on their 1910-1912 expedition to the South Pole. They were given rations of 4,500 calories per day, which is now known to be insufficient when hauling sledges, and especially at higher altitudes.

According to Dr Mike Stroud, a polar veteran and expert in nutrition, the explorers were getting some 3,000 calories per day less than their bodies needed, and would have lost about 25kg of body weight before they reached their destination and started the return journey. Scott and his companions on the trip to the pole are now assumed to have died of starvation.

9. The Sochi biathlon track

The day before the opening of the Sochi Winter Olympics, it was discovered that the biathlon track - which should be a loop of 2.5km (1.6 miles) - was 40m (130ft) short. Competitors in 7.5km events would have covered less than 7.4km, while those in 12.5km events would have done 12.3km. Some hasty repair work ensured the track was the right length for the first event three days later. Lengthening a biathlon track is clearly easier than lengthening a swimming pool. It's often been reported that 50m swimming pools at Crystal Palace in London and Leeds were made a few centimetres too short - sometimes, it's said, because the designers forgot about the thickness of the tiles. These stories, however, appear to be urban myths. A similar report about Portsmouth's Olympic pool in 2011 also turned out to be incorrect.

10. The Millennium

To mark the new millennium, London got a new footbridge in June 2000, linking the newly opened Tate Modern art gallery, on the south bank of the Thames, with the north bank near St Paul's cathedral. But people noticed that the 350m-long structure wobbled alarmingly as they walked across. The designers had failed to take into account the "synchronised footfall" effect - as the bridge began to sway, people would adjust their footsteps to the rhythm of the bridge's movements, inadvertently magnifying them. The following year, work began to install dampers, like car shock absorbers, to reduce the bridge's bounce. It was reopened in February 2002.

URGENT WARNING FOR ALL BUYER AND SELLER/BROKERS

This should be the most important information released in the commodity industry, where the severity of this warning should make everyone realize the most serious impact that pertains in Oil and other commodities transactions.

FEM is happy to release this very important message to anyone involved in the commodities industry concerning the new measures with respect to all Buyers and Sellers conducting business' transactions around the globe.

From now on, if an ICPO, LOI, RWA, or BCL is issued and the document is not real, true and/or actually verifiably factual, the Buyer will be able to inform the FBI, ICC, and INTERPOL. In addition, after an FCO is sent to the Buyer, there should be a formal answer to Seller from Buyer in a timely manner in accordance with the agreement between parties.

If there is no response from the Buyer in a timely manner, the buying company will be reported to the FBI, ICC and INTERPOL. If this action is repeated by sellers, they too will also be reported for abuse of the NCND, LOI, ICPO, AND RWA OR BCL, FOR THIS IS NOW A FEDERAL OFFENSE.

It is important to transmit this to all clients that work with providers that are members of the ICC, FBI, and other international organizations. From this point forward, the international codes will be strictly enforced to exclude all intruders that send or transmit false information. Those who submit a false NCND/IMFPA, LOI, ICPO, RWA or BCL, or FCO, as well as FALSE PROOF OF PRODUCT (POP), FALSE PROOF OF FUNDS (POF) WILL BE CHARGED WITH A CRIME.

This offense went into effect on November 15, 2008 and re-effected in June 2013 after a meeting was held between the Federal Reserve, European Central Bank, Interpol, Federal Bureau of Investigation and Central Intelligence Agency.

The reason for this measurement is to protect the commodities industry which is a fundamental part of the world's economy.

The Non-Circumvention, Non-Disclosure & Working Agreement (NCNDA&IMFPA) we signed and it stated: WARNING:

This should be the most important information released in the commodity industry for years where the severity of this warning should make everyone realize the serious impact that pertains in all oil and other commodities transactions.
