What's Vladimir Putin's next move?

Russian President Vladimir Putin has been waging a proxy war of sorts with Obama and the West in Syria, to date it shows and he isn't backing down or will he?

The Russian economy is rapidly weakening. Inflation is high; the ruble, weak. Interest rates are heading up, and disposable incomes have dropped. None of this affects the popularity of President Vladimir Putin, however; it's shot up ever since he defied the West over Ukraine, triggering some of the economy's woes by weakening the currency and goading the West into imposing sanctions. For now, Russians are backing Putin all the way and not blaming him for faulty economic stewardship. At the same time, they are cutting their own spending dramatically.

This situation pits two powerful forces against each other: patriotism vs. economic reality. For now, patriotism has the upper hand; but if the economy continues its slide, Russians may change their mind. "Pride and patriotism have awakened in Russians, as was the case in the USSR, and that's why they are willing to sacrifice some part of their well-being," says Dilyara Ibragimova, a lecturer on economic sociology at the Higher School of Economics in Moscow. "I think that's temporary, because the continued growth of prices will hit their pocketbooks and affect their attitude."

Putin's approval ratings took off on the back of his actions in Ukraine, first by bailing out then-President Viktor Yanukovich in December, and then in March by seizing Crimea after months of deadly protests toppled Yanukovich. Putin managed to increase his popularity to 84 percent by early August, up from 61 percent in November, his lowest ranking since June 2000. He's now only four percentage points short of a record reached in September 2008, after Russia's five-day war with Georgia, according to pollsters at the Levada Center in Moscow.

Putin would win an election by 64 percentage points if a vote were held now, according to a survey by the Public Opinion Foundation in Moscow. "Political comfort is a substitute for economic comfort," says Sergey Tsybizov, the head of IT projects in the Moscow region at Russian automaker Sollers. "Essentially it's as if Russians were handed a cookie and they are happy, but almost all of them forget they need bread or soup."

What's Vladimir Putin's next move?

Nato states create new force to counter Moscow

Britain and six other states are to create a new joint expeditionary force of at least 10,000 personnel to bolster Nato's power in response to Russian aggression in Ukraine.

The force will be one of the boldest steps taken by any group of Nato members in response to the crisis. The aim is to create a fully functioning, division-sized force for rapid deployment and regular, frequent exercises. Officials involved in the planning say it will have the capacity to increase significantly in size.

This is all part of a much wider overhaul of Nato's response forces which Nato officials say is not solely linked to Ukraine; it will be capable of deploying anywhere within the alliance to give immediate reassurance and a demonstration of alliance resolve.

'Putin says I can take Kiev'

Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko has accused Russia of "direct, overt aggression against Ukraine".

Russia has repeatedly denied Ukrainian and Western accusations that it is providing troops and equipment to the rebels.

Meanwhile, a Russian official responded to allegations that Russian President Vladimir Putin had commented: "If I want to, I can take Kiev in two weeks".

The reported comments were said to be made in a phone call to European Commission President Jose Manuel Barroso, and were reported in Italy's La Repubblica newspaper.

Kremlin adviser Yuri Ushakov said that whether or not the words were spoken, the quote "was taken out of context and had a totally different meaning", Russia's Itar-Tass news agency reported.

China's 'bad banks' return to the spotlight

The prospect of the first ever default in China's rapidly expanding shadow banking sector sent shockwaves through financial markets this year.

As word spread that a Rmb3bn trust product called "China Credit Equals Gold #1" was on the verge of defaulting, investors began to question the stability of China's entire financial system.

But just days before the scheduled default, a mystery buyer bailed out the product, allowing investors to get back all the principal and most of the interest they were owed.

The Financial Times has learnt that the covert saviour, not publicly identified until now, was Huarong Asset Management, one of four "bad banks" set up in the late 1990s to deal with an enormous load of non-performing loans in the banking system.

More than five years into one of the biggest credit booms in history, Chinese banks are bracing for a fresh wave of bad debt that some analysts and economists believe could rival that of the late 1990s.

Companies such as Huarong are again expected to play a crucial role.

"As the economy slows, the market is expecting a further rise in non-performing assets," said Harry Hu, an analyst at Standard & Poor's. "We expect business volumes to increase for [Huarong and the other three bad banks]."

Signs of stress are already emerging as scores and perhaps hundreds of high-interest trust loans to risky borrowers run into trouble and China's state-backed banking system struggles to avoid outright defaults.

So far there have been about 60 reported cases of trust product bailouts, but "in our opinion for every reported case, many unreported ones exist," analysts at Bank of America Merrill Lynch wrote in a report last month.

Credit Equals Gold, which offered an annual interest rate of 10 per cent, was sold to investors by state-owned Industrial and Commercial Bank of China, the country's largest lender.

China's 'bad banks' return to the spotlight

Although ICBC was not technically liable for losses from the default, it came under huge pressure from the government and investors who had bought the product through its branches.

To bail the product out at the last minute, ICBC made a Rmb3bn loan to Huarong, which then bought the loan backing the trust product at about 95 cents on the dollar (95 fen on the Rmb).

That meant investors could be repaid almost everything they were owed and confidence in China's shadow banking sector was restored, albeit at the expense of continued moral hazard.

Huarong's plan to sell shares to global investors in an initial public offering, most likely in Hong Kong in the first half of next year, was probably the reason it was so keen to keep this arrangement quiet, according to people familiar with details of the bailout.

Huarong's involvement in such an obviously political bailout would have undermined its argument to investors that it has transformed itself from an arm of the state into a commercial entity operating purely on market principles.

It has made that argument quite convincingly until now.

On Thursday, Huarong announced it had sold a 21 per cent stake for $2.4bn to a group of eight investors, including Goldman Sachs, Warburg Pincus and Malaysian sovereign wealth fund Khazanah.

Huarong's upcoming IPO and its involvement in the bailout of China's first big shadow banking default have pushed the spotlight back on to the role of China's "bad banks".

In the late 1990s, following a boom and bust in government-directed lending, China's banking sector was technically insolvent, with bad loans making up as much as 40 per cent of lenders' portfolios, according to independent analysts.

China's 'bad banks' return to the spotlight

To deal with the problem, Beijing established Huarong and three other “asset management companies” – Orient, Great Wall and Cinda – to take Rmb1.4tn of bad loans off the banks' books.

The government then injected hundreds of billions of renminbi in fresh capital into the banks, sold stakes to foreign investors and eventually listed all of them in Hong Kong, although Beijing retains majority stakes and control of the lenders.

Before their bailouts, bank managers across the country usually gave loans according to orders from local Communist Party officials with little consideration for the ability of borrowers to repay them.

After they were listed, the banks became much more commercial and discerning in who they lent to.

But as China faced a collapse in growth in the wake of the 2008 global financial crisis, the government ordered banks to lend indiscriminately to prop up growth. The effort to boost growth rates was successful, but it also resulted in one of the biggest and fastest credit expansions in history, with much of the money going to borrowers with an uncertain ability to repay.

In their half-year filings to the Hong Kong and Shanghai stock exchanges, China's biggest banks all reported a surge in bad loans in the first half of this year.

Palladium on the Rise

Palladium Advances to 13-Year High as Gold Trades Little Changed

About Palladium

Precious metals offer the investor the opportunity to possess real physical metal in the form of bullion bars or rounds. Bullion is readily available from palladium. The purchase price of bullion from reputable dealers is normally on a spot plus basis -- the current market spot price of the metal plus dealer markup. When the investor wishes to sell the bullion, the bullion dealer will purchase it back at a buy price based on spot. A transaction fee may apply. Palladium bullion is readily available for purchase. As with other forms of precious metal bullion, ownership of palladium offers the similar investment opportunities as the better known gold or silver

Palladium rose to the highest level in more than 13 years as prospects of further sanctions against Russia increased concern that supplies from the largest producer may be disrupted. Gold traded below a one-week high.

Palladium for immediate delivery added as much as 0.5 percent to $909.63 an ounce, the highest since February 2001, and traded at $908.96 by 2:29 p.m. in Singapore, advancing for a fourth day, Bloomberg generic pricing show. The metal in August capped a seventh month of gains that was the longest streak since January 2011.

European Union governments agreed to impose new sanctions on Russia if the conflict with Ukraine worsens. There have been no metal-related sanctions yet. Palladium has advanced 27 percent this year as increased usage in catalytic converters, which curb harmful emissions in cars, and a five-month mine strike that ended in June in South Africa, the second-biggest producer, reduced supplies.

"Palladium is well-positioned for further gains," Victor Thianpiriya, an analyst at Australia & New Zealand Banking Group Ltd., wrote in a note today. "Prices hit their highest since 2001 as supply concerns mounted amid the prospect for further sanctions against Russia."

Gold for immediate delivery traded at $1,288.15 an ounce from $1,287.32 on Aug. 29, when the metal completed its first weekly rise in three. Prices climbed to a one-week high of $1,296.61 on Aug. 28 as the U.S. and Europe condemned what they said were incursions by Russia into Ukraine.

Barclays Bank Leaving Spain

Barclays loses £500m after Spanish banking clear-out

Barclays is having a clear out of unprofitable overseas operations. Barclays has made a loss of £500m on the sale of its Spanish banking division as it follows plans to shed unprofitable businesses.

The British bank has sold its retail banking, wealth, investment management and corporate banking business in Spain to Caixa Bank for €800m (£632m).

Caixa Bank, Spain's third-largest lender, will take on 262 branches, 2,400 employees and 550,000 customers once the deal is completed this year. Barclays, however, will keep its investment banking operations and credit card business in Spain.

The sale is part of the turnaround strategy of chief executive Antony Jenkins, who wants to restore profitability by selling off some of its struggling European divisions and cutting costs.

"We were clear that this business, while not central to Barclays' strategy, could be attractive to another owner and today's announcement reflects that perspective," Jenkins said. "We remain on track to rebalance Barclays as part of our strategy to deliver sustainable returns for our shareholders."

Barclays confirmed it had also sold its UAE retail banking business to Abu Dhabi Islamic Bank. On this deal, Barclays is making a pre-tax gain of £119m on the sale of a portfolio of mortgages, unsecured credit and deposits.

Barclays will make a loss of £500m on the Caixa deal; £400m will be booked in the third quarter of 2014 and £100m in the final quarter.

Barclays expanded rapidly into Spain in the early part of the last decade, buying Banco Zaragozano for €1.1bn in 2003. The banks operated under a Barclays brand name but ran into problems when the Spanish housing market collapsed, prompting the deep recession.

According to Reuters, Barclays shut or sold 161 branches in Spain last year and cut around a third of its workforce in the country.

Tighter Broker-Dealer Regulation Needed

The role of broker-dealers in short term lending markets may exacerbate financial strains in times of turmoil, and it's a problem that has yet to be addressed, stated by Boston Federal Reserve president Eric Rosengren.

The New York Fed, reiterated a longstanding criticism of the financial institutions that are central to lubricating the money system. Taking aim at the intermediaries that play a crucial role in the buying and selling of securities, the central banker said broker-dealers pose a potential risk to financial stability.

FEM Thoughts

FEM feel that this is just the tip of the ice berg, we all acknowledged broker-dealers are a "critical to market infrastructure," that trigger runs on liquidity that destabilize the entire financial system, and should be subject to tougher capital requirements and regulation.

We also know that some broker-dealer companies are part of the elite market maker, who has a large portfolio in the main stream commodity market. FEM feels changes are needed immediately to trigger more confidence towards buyer and sellers.

Especially after the past financial crisis that drove most institutions onto bankruptcy, by independent and major brokerage institutions.

SEC Adopts Final Amendments to Broker-Dealers Rules

Banks, Broker-dealers, Capital requirements, Consumer protection, Eric Fischer, Exchange Act, Financial institutions, Financial Regulation.

www.femagazine.co.uk

Tighter Broker-Dealer Regulation Needed

FEM has reviewed four institutions (FINRA-SEC-NFA-ESMA)

Who is FINRA?

FINRA (Financial Industry Regulatory Authority), is dedicated to investor protection and market integrity through effective and efficient regulation of the securities industry.

FINRA is not part of the government. We're an independent, not-for-profit organization authorized by Congress to protect America's investors by making sure the securities industry operates fairly and honestly.

We do this by: writing and enforcing rules governing the activities of more than 4,135 securities firms with approximately 634,505 brokers; examining firms for compliance with those rules; fostering market transparency; and educating investors.

Who is SEC?

Securities and Exchange Commission is to protect investors, maintain fair, orderly, and efficient markets, and facilitate capital formation.

SEC cracks down on unregistered broker-dealers

The Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) staff appears to be focusing on the broker-dealer registration issue in the context of private securities marketing activities. Recent SEC enforcement actions demonstrate there are serious consequences for acting as an unregistered broker, even where there are no allegations of fraud. This regulatory focus will likely continue, and could increase, with the use of general solicitation and general advertising in Rule 506 private offerings permitted by the Jumpstart Our Business Startups (JOBS) Act.

Common Scenario with Risks

The broker-dealer registration issue commonly arises when a company or private investment fund raises capital from investors in a private (unregistered) securities offering using its own employees or third party "finders" to locate investors. When these individuals solicit investors on a regular basis or are specifically compensated for their efforts, they may be required to register as a broker or to be associated with a registered broker-dealer firm.

www.femagazine.co.uk

Tighter Broker-Dealer Regulation Needed

A company or individual acting as an unregistered broker-dealer is in violation of applicable registration requirements and faces possible government enforcement action, monetary penalties and investor lawsuits seeking rescission of the investment and recovery of the purchase price paid. Registering as a broker-dealer is a significant undertaking and will subject the firm to extensive regulation by the SEC, Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) and/or state securities regulators. It is normally not a practical alternative for companies engaged in limited or infrequent capital raising activities.

Who is ESMA?

European Securities and Markets Authority (ESMA), works in the field of securities legislation and regulation to improve the functioning of financial markets in Europe, strengthening investor protection and cooperation between national competent authorities.

The idea behind ESMA is to establish a "EU-wide financial markets watchdog". One of its main tasks is to regulate credit rating agencies. In 2010 credit rating agencies were criticized for the lack of transparency in their assessments and for a possible conflict of interest.^[2] At the same time, the impact of the assigned ratings became significant not only for companies and banks, but also for states.

Who is NFA?

National Futures Association (NFA) is the industrywide self-regulatory organization for the U.S. futures industry. NFA's mission is to provide innovative regulatory programs and services that ensure futures industry integrity, protect market participants and help its Members meet their regulatory responsibilities. NFA's activities are overseen by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC), the government agency responsible for regulating the U.S. futures industry

FE Diamond News Diamonds, from Pits to Depths

Several international mining corporations have established regional headquarters in Botswana and are looking for diamonds, uranium, gold and oil. Many have come back with positive results. Galane Gold Ltd announced that it has kicked off its first ore exploration from Tau underground in the northern part of the country.

Galane Gold or GG is a Toronto-based investment firm, an unhedged gold producer and explorer acting in mining operation and exploration in the Republic of Botswana. It is a publicly traded company which is listed on both the TSX Venture Exchange and the Botswana Stock Exchange. Galane Gold has already had several extensive exhibitions in the management of mining and exploring programs.

"This gold exploration is an expected evolution in order to improve the company's performance," GG said. The firm contributes with senior professional employees, who are committed to respect the environment and the communities in which they work.

At the beginning, GG didn't have the intention to pursue the resource of gold in Tau through underground mining. It started the project in the fourth quarter of 2013 and has finished its forced portal entry at the bottom of the existing Tau pit and the installation of the entire infrastructure required for the exploration. The company has put a graphical presentation of the detailed mining plan on the reported resource to mine about 85,000 ounces of gold over the next three years.

Ravi Sood, the Chief executive officer of Galane Gold, stated, "This project is a major step in the evolution of the company both with regards to a change from open pit mining to underground mining and our plans to extend mine life through further exploration." He then added, "We have completed this project within six months and from our own operating cash-flows is a testament to the experienced management team that we have put in place."

Botswana is ranked as the best investment jurisdiction in Africa, according to World Bank Global Investment Benchmarking Report. Gold extends losses on global cues, tumbles

New Delhi: Continuing its loss for the third day, gold prices plunged by Rs155 to close at over one-week low of Rs28,020 per ten gram in Delhi Bullion market on Tuesday.

This was largely in tune with a weakening trend overseas amidst low demand from jewellers and retailers.

Bullion merchants said apart from subdued demand from jewellers and retailers despite ongoing festive season, a weakening global trend where gold eased to over one-week low as investors weighed the health of the global economy against tension between Ukraine and Russia, mainly weighed on precious metal prices.

Gold in Singapore, which normally set price trend on the domestic front, fell 0.80% to $1,275.28 an ounce, the lowest since 26 August and silver by 0.40% to $19.39 an ounce. Besides, shifting of funds towards the record-breaking equity markets from bullion too dampened the sentiment, they said.

In Delhi, gold of 99.9 and 99.5% purity plunged by Rs155 each to Rs28,020 and Rs27,820 per ten gram, respectively, a level last seen on 25 August. It had lost Rs125 in the previous two sessions. Sovereign, however, traded in a tight range in limited deals and settled at last level of Rs24,600 per piece of eight gram.

Tracking gold, silver ready also declined by Rs100 to Rs42,700 per kg while weekly-based delivery gained Rs50 at Rs42,190 per kg.

On the other hand, silver coins remained unaltered at Rs74,000 for buying and Rs75,000 for selling of 100 pieces.
